NEW-YORK, TUESDAY, MARCH 15, 1853. THE SPITFIRE-A Nautical Romance. By

A glowingly written Ocean Story, the production of a sailor, who writes with all the ardent impulses of a sailor pessionately attached to his prefession. It abounds in accurate and graphic descriptions of the life and habits of sea men. It overflows with adventures—humorous, tratic, thrilling, and sentimental, and all wrought up with so much skill, as either to convulse with laughter or thrill with intensity. The great merit of this work is its life-like earnestness and reality. The characters, scenes and incidents, pass before us glowing with life and vividness. The author never drenes, he is always thoroughly in earnest. His ad-ventures crowd every page. The reader's interest is seized upon at the first, and until the last page there is no relaxing. he is drawn on fascinated, thrilled, delighted. It must become extremely popular, and find warm friends wherever introduced. Price 50 cents. Published this day by
